Porky & Co set a new standard of living in Smithton

A new residential development is set to lift the standard of living in Smithton with 66 allotments being developed on a site off Massey St near the Tier Hill Lookout.

Highlands is being developed by Porky & Co, a Tasmanian developer known for property developments in great locations in regional Tasmania.

For a town that has not seen a development in years, Highlands comes at a period of great public demand, and with design and landscaping guidelines set to inspire cleaner living environments, the development will be marked as the premier address in Smithton.

Sam Hogg, director of Porky & Co considers the site off Massey St to be a lucky find.

“We are extremely lucky to have a relatively flat site that is elevated with some blocks having magnificent views and still be protected from southerly winds,” says Sam.

Highlands will offer a total of 66 land lots many with views of the ocean inlet, promoting spacious living with land lots from 840 sqm to a massive 2,547 sqm.

A positive part of the transformation of the site is the landscape and design guidelines set to inspire a cleaner environment with landscape architects, Kirby Brown on board the team to create Highlands as the premier address in Smithton.

“Porky & Co always look for the best locations in regional Tasmania,” says Sam.

“The Massey St site really ticks all the boxes. It will outperform in terms of economic viability, design and environmental sustainability.”

Local real estate agents Harcourts have been appointed as the sales agents and land is now available from only $69,000.
